Biographical Sketch

Arthur L. Pillsbury (1869-1925)

Pillsbury was born in Bloomington on November 29, 1869. He grew up in Bloomington and attended schools in Normal. His father, William L. Pillsbury, was principal of the Model School at Illinois State Normal University. In 1880, William Pillsbury became principal of Springfield (Illinois) High School, and it was there that Arthur graduated in 1888.

Pillsbury attended Harvard University, graduating in 1892 with a degree in engineering. He then moved back to Illinois to attend the University of Illinois. He graduated with a degree in architecture in 1895 (five years earlier, the U of I had become the first university in the nation to offer a four-year degree in architecture).

In 1897, Pillsbury became one of the first architects to become licensed in Illinois. The following year, he settled in Bloomington and partnered with

Herman Evans, becoming in the process Bloomington's first architect with a university degree. On November 9, 1898, he married Daisy Deane Hill, daughter of Bloomington physician

William Hill. The newlyweds had one daughter, Frances, and lived at the Hill residence, 109 E. Olive Street.

Pillsbury's career accelerated after the Great Bloomington Fire of June 19, 1900. Within 8 hours, 45 buildings and four-and-a-half city blocks were burnt to the ground. For Pillsbury, as well as local architects George Miller and Paul Moratz, the fire proved to be a golden opportunity to remake much of the central business district.

Pillsbury's practice continued to grow during the first quarter of the 20th century. During his career he designed and renovated approximately 16 garages, 17 banks, 22 barns, 32 churches, 73 businesses, 97 schools, 435 homes and numerous other types of buildings.

For many years, Pillsbury served as architect of the Bloomington Board of Education (today known as District 87), and he was in charge of planning and building five schools: Bloomington High, Irving, Emerson, Jefferson, and Horatio G. Bent. One of the last buildings Pillsbury designed was the Ensenberger Building, located at 212 North Center Street on the Courthouse Square in downtown Bloomington. This English Gothic-style building was completed in May 1926, six months after Pillsbury's untimely death.

Pillsbury's life came to an end the night of October 24, 1925. As he was returning from an Illinois vs. Michigan football game in Champaign, a broken steering knuckle caused the automobile to plunge down an embankment. Pillsbury was pronounced dead at the scene. He was laid to rest in Evergreen Memorial Cemetery in Bloomington.

Scope Note

This collection consists of blueprints, floor plans, renderings, photographs and specifications covering the years of Arthur L. Pillsbury's career, 1895-1925. It also includes the same content for many of Arthur Pillsbury's associates and successor architects, 1926-2004, including Joseph Orme Evans, Richard D. Mills, Darrell C. Schroeder, Marvin M. Maurer, Edgar E. Lundeen, Philip R. Hooton, Edwin Roozen, and Archie N. Schaeffer.
