Historical Sketch

Edward Mayne Wilson was born August 16, 1866, in Dale Township, McLean County. His parents were Adoniram Judson Wilson and Ellen E. (Cornell) Wilson. He was the third of nine children.

From an early age, Wilson showed great interest in writing and recording events in and around Dale Township and greater McLean County. In 1881, at the age of 15, he began writing a journal he called The Times. This journal, like all that followed, was written newspaper-style using banners, headlines, and columns. He continued with The Keystone Monthly, The News, The Dale, and last, The Daliete. He was an accomplished amateur artist, and these journals include wonderfully detailed pencil and pen sketches of landscapes, buildings, and humorous scenes of college life.

While at Illinois State Normal University, Wilson served as editor of the student newspaper The Vidette. From 1892 to 1895, he worked for The Daily Pantagraph, Bloomington's longtime newspaper. On May 17, 1894, he married Lettie B. Rutledge of Heyworth, the daughter of Owen C. and Lettie. A. (Batershell) Rutledge. Lettie passed away a little over a year later on July 3, 1895, and is buried at Heyworth Cemetery. She left a young son, Lyndon Rutledge Wilson, who was born one month before her death.

After the death of Lettie, Edward moved to Chicago and worked for The Record-Herald, one of the city's many daily newspapers. There he met Mary E. Lawrence, and they were married September 11, 1897 in Belvidere, Boone County, IL. They had one son, Edward, born on February 6, 1899.

In 1901 the Wilsons moved to Denver because they were both suffering from tuberculosis. Edward died on May 5, 1903, and Mary followed a few months later. Edward Wilson's body was brought back to McLean County and he is buried beside his parents at East Twin Grove Cemetery in Dry Grove Township.

According to a Wilson family history written in 1917, Lyndon lived in Champaign, IL, while Edward lived in Oak Park, IL. Edward Wilson died in February 1973. At the time, he was living in River Forest, IL.
